Enrich your world at Brain Day 2014

Brain Day 2014 is a free public event, organised by the Centre for Brain Research in partnership with the Neurological Foundation of New Zealand. The theme for Brain Day this year is 'Your Sense-ational Brain' focusing on the brain's role in our senses. Minute by minute our five senses bring us information about our world and allow us to experience our environment.

The full programme of speakers, discussion panels and activities has now been finalised and can be seen on our Brain Day web page

What Scandinavian design can teach us

New Zealand can learn important design lessons from the Nordic countries - but not the ones you might think of. Forget the clichés about uncomplicated, functional objects with their roots in the natural world. The real lesson, says design historian Widar Halén, is how these countries successfully developed and projected a collective design identity to the world.

Learn more from Widar Halén at the Norse Code Conference at the Business School on March 15, where he is a keynote speaker.

Big Egg Hunt

Over Easter 2014, Kiwis can take part in The Whittaker's Big Egg Hunt - the first event of its kind in this country. It showcases giant eggs designed by top New Zealand artists all in support of Starship.

Several of our alumni and staff, including Professor Andrew Barrie from the School of Architecture and Planning have designed eggs. Will you be able to find them?
